Crisis is more common than ever and can strike when you least expect it.

Every day you hear about another School or Church shooting, Suicide, Terrorist Attack, Airline Crash or how thousands of homes were destroyed by Hurricane, Fire or Tornado.

If you, or someone you love has survived a major crisis you know how overwhelming the stress can be. What most people don't know are the early warning signs of PTSD and how to prevent secondary trauma that can lead to very serious health problems months or sometimes even years after a major crisis. The U.S. National Guard estimates up to 35% of those exposed to traumatic events such as disasters and terrorism will develop significant post-traumatic psychological distress and perhaps PTSD.

There are proven psychological strategies that prevent these serious health problems from occurring, but if ignored can even lead to early death.

Join nationally certified counselor and crisis response trainer Dwight Bain for a rapid understanding of the dangerous warning signs and more importantly, what to do to reduce the stress and prevent stress related health problems after a crisis. Bain worked at Ground Zero after the terrorist attacks of 9/11 and has equipped thousands with psychological survival skills. He is quoted by the New York Times, Washington Post and many others as an expert on how to reduce traumatic stress that leads to early death.
